THAT COPPER STILL.

Captain John Cahill Responsible for the Sale—His Reasons Therefor.

The name of the individual who sold the copper still to William Lengenscamp, but which could not be obtained on Wednesday by the most persistent inquiry, was learned yesterday, Captain John Cahill, the engineer of the Postoffice building, being the person upon whom the responsibility for the act rests. When this fact was learned, the reporter sought the engineer and found him in the basement of the building, his looks indicating that he felt in the keenest manner the full force of the uncomfortable position in which the sale of the property had placed him. In answer to interrogatories, Cahill said that the still had been brought to the building to assist in the conviction of the parties who were engaged in the business of manufacturing contrary to law, and after a trial he was instructed by the officers (not naming them) to have the same destroyed, there being nothing to justify a public sale. He said that this order was given one day when the officers were in the room and saw the old copper still therein. Concerning the fact that he sent the boy out to learn what would be paid for old copper, and when he returned the still was taken down in the elevator and carried out through the hallway in the most public manner; that a large number of persons saw it and made comments on its appearance; that the boy who made the sale is the same that he sent to Lengenscamp to return the money received for it, and that when he was asked concerning the matter he at no time denied it, but acknowledged the sale, told what he had received for it, and was surprised to learn that any correspondence had taken place or that the Government wanted it sold.

Cahill had been connected with the Federal building for a number of years, and inquiry among the officers yesterday developed the fact that he had always been considered an honest, industrious man, and there was surprise manifested when his name figured so prominently in connection with the missing property. Granting that his statement is all true, he seems to have acted in the matter without proper investigation, for the property was in charge of Collector McKay, and he alone could authorize any one to dispose of it. Cahill appears not to have known this, though he did not consult the Collector at any time about disposing of the property. The facts in the case will, of course, be reported to the Washington Department, and the action of the officials here will depend upon instructions received from the fountain-head. It is not at all improbable that the United States Grand Jury will be called upon to further investigate the affair.

The Kokomo Dispatch says: Hon. Rufus Magee, of Loganport, Minister to Sweden and Norway, is in Washington this week qualifying and receiving his credentials. He will sail inside of four weeks. His appointment is pure gold. Everybody is delighted with it, and no one more so than the Dispatch.
